ROTC PROGRAMS WANTED
ACROSS NATION

MISSOULA---

More than 100 colleges and universities throughout the nation want to have Reserve Officers Training Corps programs on their campuses, but are unable to because of Department of Defense limits on the number of units available, Lt. Col. Keith Angwin, military science professor at the University of Montana, said recently, following his return to the Missoula campus from an ROTC conference.

Angwin, who also is head of the AROTC program at the University, was one of 150 military professors to attend the conference at Ft. McNair, Washington, D.C.

Participants included Army, Air Force and Navy ROTC instructors from colleges and universities throughout the United States and from the major military colleges and instruction centers.

Angwin said that during the conference he noted close cooperation between Army, Navy and Air Force in aligning their instruction programs without concern to individual service requirements.

At the conference, Dr. Don R. Mallett, vice president of Purdue University, told the participants any college or university would be foolish to drop ROTC from its curriculum, Angwin said.
